

Sports Assignment

---

This assignment focussed on a cycling event in central London, organised to mark the upcoming occasion of International Women's Day.

---

The event itself did not have a large turnout or impact; many people went at their own pace without taking part competitively, and many went in their own direction and speed.

---

The event was also supposed to only include women and non-binary individuals, but people of all races and genders took part.

---

Overall, the event was not impactful enough to be considered competitive. In the end, by many it was enjoyed as a reason to cycle within the freedom of London.